From the New York Statesman A VIEW OF THE CITY OF WASH.

NASHINGTON, DEC. 16, 1822.
On my arrival, after having taken lodgeings for so long a time as the proceeding of Congress shall be peculiarly interesting. I hastened to take a view of the exterior of the city. That no one might bins my oplimion by descanting on its beauties or defects. It walked over its extensive area afone, first istrolling up the Georgetown road to the freights beyond the President's House; thence quite across the Potomic bridge, about a mile in length planting my foot for the first time upon the soil of ethe ancient diminion? and thence to the Extertern Branch, returning along the banks of the above points the Capital and President's House appear to good advantage, fitting their massive and stately column of marble with a grandeur becoming the capital of a great empira. The beat view of the city, taken as a thole, is from the elevated ridge on this side of the Potomac bridge, where the eye surveys the lofty hills at a distance forming the fact ground—the public buildings and most of the houses of the City—and the river rolling in majority on the left. Goose creek, as it was very properly called, and which has ludicrowsly enough received the classical name of the Tiber, obtrudes itself upon the sight with its point. On the whole, althought the external appearance of the city is not as grahd and beautiful as a person of tage, and is by no means so ineligible as the post of Moore and the prose of others. * WASHINGTON, DEC. 16, 1829. have represented. Fortunately, the air at this time has the keenness of a northern winter, and the ground is so frozen, that I experienced no inconvenience from mad in walking several miles.

"I'here is a moral grandeur associated with the Capital of the United States, which

"There is a moral grandeur associated with the Capital of the United States, which is transcends in dignity the natural scene, by of the place, and which I never so fully realised as whife I stood gazing upon these national buildings. Astynomers tell us there is a point within the sun's fisk, where if the eye could be placed, it would see the planetary world early in gabout a common centre, with the most perfect order, and insimony. The same idea presents Reelf, when viewing the United States from this central position. The intricacies and irregularities arising from an oblique view drsappear, and the intellectual vision stretches to the west, beholding the several attes, moving on quietly in their own orbit, without crossing each others putb, on producing, any jostling in the system. Another tho's unwillingly intrudes. How long shall it be before the harmouy shall cease, such this beautiful system be destroyed? How long shall it be centrifugal and attractive powers he so exactly balanced as to bind the states in their respective spheres? If the agitation of some great question, such, for inon of some great question; such for in-stance; as a violent struggle for the presi-dency, should valienate one portion of our beloved country from the rest," henindeed would the fancied chaos of the poet be realised, and we should see for the purpose of examining its inside. It is a noble pile, constructed of freestone and marble from the banks of the Potomac. Na marble from the banks of the Potomac. No idea can be formed of its extent by a riew from the ground, or from walking through its numerous apartments. ed its labyrinths, and climbed to the togsthe dome, where I could see the dimensions of the building, which covers an area of something more than an acre. The prospection the summit is picturesque and sublime commanding a full view of the city, the estern branch, and the Potomac from Georgians.

olt would be an endless task to attenda description of the Capitol, its spacious all, chambers, and committee rooms. An our affords scarcely time to peep into all of; them. I had only leasure to walk through. for which a large apartment is now fitting up in the centre of the building. The chamber of the House of Representative probably exceeds in magnificence any legislative hall in the world: Its semi circular galleries and dome, supported by numerous pullars of marble—its emblems, tapestry. pillars of marble-its emblems, tapestry, and furniture, all of the richest materials, and finished with taste, present an appear ance of princely splendour. - Unfortunately I experienced the same defect in the hell, which others have so frequently complained of—a difficulty of hearing what was said

Another year, to the amount,
le added in time's long account;
Commenced, when first o'er chaos roll'd
The Sun his glorious beams of gold;
And never from the daws of time,
no on a year of greater crime.
Not a'en, when on the sintil plaine;
Descended firs, like showers of rate;
For look to those to the sun of the sintil plaine;
And cloath'd their field.
And spread her brightes a sintil
Where never Sea dil ever lar.
A Land more levely, or more way.
Than did reflect the Egean W.
Amid those Isles that gem the
None loveller there than Seio, time
Scio, in times departed long, Scio, in times departed long, Renowned for beauty and for Son Renowned for beauty and for Son But on thy poor devoted hand, Has fallen the Moslem's verigeful ha And now the base and Caftaned hord Has wasted thee with fire and sword! Barbarian rage hath the high thy plains, And desolution o'er the reigns! But e'er revolves another Sun, May Christian States combine as one, To avenue thy suffering and thy loss, Beneath the banners of the Cross, Till none shall wan the Pronhet there;
And the man by the Pronhet there;
And the man by the Process of the shall and the man by the Process of the shall and the shall warm speak. To crowned heads, and hearts of steell Some Son of Greece shall strike the blow Proud Autocrat, that lays the low;

Thou might'st have been her friend, but But still there beams a ray of light, But still there beams a ray of light,
On proud Verona's steeples bright,
Where Christian Kings in vain repair,
And hold their Aulic Council there,
Unless their first resolve shall be,
To set all three fer street from slavery free!
O that some spirit may prevail,
Like his who walfed by the gale,
Que pome and power and kingly show,
To raze the Pagan Temples low,
And with bold, chivalrous band,
A Pilgrim sought the Holy Land,
Resolved the Christian flag should wave
In triumph o'er the Prophet's grave,
Richard the gallant and the brave!
Yet ally repair to foreign climes,
To find long catalogues of crimes;
Looks here the baleful tropic breeze
Beart frates through our western seas;
Men fed on blood and bent on spoils,
The Demon Spirits of the Isles;
May clouds of death hang o'er these waves,
And Pohtze find them early graves.
But pestilence throughout our clime,

But pestilence throughout our clime, Has follow'd on the heels of crime; Then may a just and proper sense Of heartfelt, honest penitence, Stay the destroyer's raging hand, and ward afflictions from the land, by health and wealth in ample store, Rep trouble from each Patron's door, Your Cassies then will surely find, Soberibers rich as well as kind.
